Stroke in Women: Across the Lifespan

Saturday January 16, 2021 at 11:00 am via Zoom

Christina Mijalski Sells,
MD, MPH

Clinical Assistant Professor,
Neurology and Neurological Sciences

Telestroke Program Medical Director
Department of Neurology
Stanford University Medical Center

- ~ A stroke is a severe life-threatening medical emergency that can happen at any time across the lifespan of a woman starting at infancy into old age.
- ~ Awareness of the symptoms is critical in getting the proper care quickly.
- ~ Do you know about the different types of strokes and what to look out for? What about the impact of COVID on strokes?
- ~ Awareness is just as much an important part of health as diet or exercise.
- ~ Come join us on zoom for a webinar presentation by Dr. Christina Mijalski Sells to learn the latest information about strokes in women from newborn to aged.
- ~ Registration is required - suggested donation of $10 would be greatly appreciated
